
The Fish

By Me (193) and ChatGPT

One day I decided to go fishing so I went to the beach nearby.
I saw a rowboat tied to the dock and asked the man if I could go for a ride.
The man smiled and said, "Why yes, my good fellow, take her out for a spin.
Oh, but it will cost you a cool ten."

I handed the man, whose name was Stan, $10 and off I rowed.
Where I was going, only the Lord knows.
I no sooner rowed a short way off shore
When a great big fish swallowed me and the boat—
Hook, line, sinker, and oars in one big gulp—and down we go.

The fish said with a great big grin,
"I got you, I got you, now let the fun begin!"

Down we plunged into the deep blue sea,
The fish's belly became my new company.
I said, "Now hold on, this just isn't right!
You've ruined my boat and my plans for tonight!"

The fish chuckled loud, his laughter did roar,
"Your plans? Oh, dear, you'll fish no more!
I've been watching you folks from the waves up high,
Always throwing hooks at us as you sigh."

"But fear not, little one, I mean you no harm.
Just showing you life beyond the shore's charm.
For down in the depths, there's much to behold,
A world of wonders and secrets untold."

Suddenly, the fish opened his maw,
And out we tumbled—oh, what I saw!
A kingdom of coral, of light and of mirth,
Creatures of beauty not found on Earth.

A jellyfish choir sang soft melodies,
While seahorses danced in the gentle sea breeze.
Octopuses juggled with shells and with pearls,
And dolphins performed their flips and swirls.

The fish said, "Now you see, there's more to our seas,
Than hooks, lines, and sinkers—oh, humans, please!"

I nodded and thanked him for the underwater tour,
Promising to respect the ocean evermore.

With a whoosh and a splash, he sent me ashore,
Beside my rowboat, just as before.
Stan laughed and said, “Well, you’ve had quite the spin!
Care to go out again? Just ten more, my friend.”

But I shook my head and smiled real wide,
For the great fish had opened my eyes inside.
No longer would I fish just for sport or for fun,
But cherish the sea, its beauty for everyone.
